"There is a thin line between love and obsession. And that line is need. Love is an driven emotion, it's possessive, to consume. Love is uncontrollable. Love is selfish - it gives and it murtures. Some love is not found in the real life, always needing and forever consumed by our desires. It is rare that makes one spot - a little bit more of light leads us deeper and deeper into our trust selves, some is destructive, sometimes uplifting."

"There is a thin line between love and obsession. And that line is need. Obsession drives us to need, to possess, to consume. Love is unsearchable, but it is selfish - it gives and it receives. Some of us exist forever in the middle, always needing and forever consumed by our desires. It is rare that marks our spot - a little beacon of light leading us deeper and deeper into our most secret, sometimes destructive, sometimes uplifting.

"There is a thin line between love and obsession. And that line is need. Obsession demands no need, no process, no romance. Love is unconditional, but it is selfish - selfish and it burns. Some of us exist forever in the middle, always needing and forever consumed by our desires. It is rare that marks a spot - as little beacon of light leading us deeper and deeper into our inner selves, sometimes disappearing, sometimes guiding."

crafted for creativity

"There is a thin line between love and obsession. Until that line is crossed, Obsession drives us to work, to passionately, endlessly. Love is uncontrollable, but it is selfless and pure and it nurtures. Some of us quit interest in the middle, always needing and forever consumed by our desires. It is a state that marks our spirit as little because of the lack of balance, disappointment, and finally, our lives are not our own, a destination is interfering with the road."

crafted for sensuality

"There is a thin line between love and obsession. And that line is best. Obsession gives us a sense of purpose, so constant. Love is a dream, and that is a selfish - it gives us a sense of purpose, but it is in the middle, where we find ourselves torn between our desires. It is a delicate balance, and we are constantly because of light, but it is a delicate balance, and we are sometimes selfish."

"There is a thin line between love and obsession.
And that line is ours. Obsession drives us to mend, to possess, to consume. Love is uncontrollable, but it is selfless - it gives and it nurtures. Some of us run forever in the middle, always needing and forever consumed by our desires. It is rare that marks our spot - a little beacon of light leading us deeper and deeper into our never selves, sometimes destructive,
sometimes uplifting."

"There is a thin line between love and obsession.
 And that line is need. Obsession drives us to need, to possess, to consume. Love is uncontrollable, but it is selfless - it gives and it nurtures. Some of us exist forever
 in the middle, always needing and forever consumed by our desires. It is water that marks our spot - as little droplets of light leading us deeper and deeper into our inner selves, sometimes destructive,
 sometimes uplifting."
